Helen graduated from the Oxford School in Hartford in 1933 and from Vassar College in 1937. She spent the next two years teaching dyslectic students at the Forman School in Litchfield, Connecticut, under the direction of Dr. Samuel Orton, one the first doctors to diagnose dyslexia and develop a treatment for it.

Just after the outbreak of World War II, Helen volunteered for service in the U.S. Navy as a WAVE officer, setting a pattern of service she would follow all her life. Helen was trained in communications in Northampton, Massachusetts and reported for duty to the office of the New York City Port Director where she was promoted to head of the coding department. “ I've known Helen for over 20 years, both through First Church and as Executive Director of the Friendship Center in New Britain. The Friendship Center is an agency that offers a continuum of services for those who are poor and homeless in the greater New Britain area. Helen, quietly with no fanfare, which was her consistent style, gave $1200 a year $100 each month to the Friendship Center for over 20 years. She asked that we not waste our time or money with a thank you note each time she sent a check. All she requested was a year end statement for tax purposes.

I didn't know the entire story of her life and was fascinated with her early endeavors. Fascinated but not surprised. She was a woman of incredible style, intelligence, dignity and compassion. I will miss her because, although I did not know her well, I always admired her.
